Project: The clients loved their home and the rest of their property, but were left feeling disappointed when in their old pool area. Seasoned world travelers, the homeowners had strong opinions on design, layout and materials. The Roman-end pool with plenty of seating, a large spa and a sunshelf at the shallow end offers active and passive recreation. The patio features vast views from atop the mountain site. Two-color handmade iridescent mosaic glass tile set in a Grecian key pattern defines the waterline, benches, steps and shelves as well as the overflow to the infinity edge and medallion on the pool floor. The tile and plaster installation crews had to tiptoe around 200 fiber optic star floor lights. Countless samples were reviewed to match a photo the homeowners had of a pool in France. A limestone quarried from the Midwest was selected. While the view from the house overlooking the valley was always breathtaking, the pool achieved a worthwhile foreground to that view.
